Decentralization, Democratic Governance, and Civil Society ...
Decentralization, Democratic Governance, and Civil Society in Comparative Perspective surveys a range of issues in decentralization: which actors in each country have been most responsible for decentralization, how much decentralization has transformed the state; and whether stronger local governments produce greater accountability to citizens.

Decentralization, Democratic Governance, and Civil Society ...
The unsatisfying riposte to all these solutions may be that we simply have to wait for true network decentralization and wholesale democratic network governance. True decentralization often emerges from the roots of centralization, and in order to reach the next phase in decentralized networks, a period of centralization may be first necessary.

The paradox of civil service reform is that democratisation may be best achieved through the centralised structure which it will ultimately undermine. Proper ordering of the reform process will use the strong culture of centralised, hierarchical institutions to instill democratic training; democratisation should precede decentralisation.

The Centralization/ Decentralization Paradox in Civil ...
Decentralization and the development of democratic local government continue quietly to sweep the world. As countries decentralise and call on their local governments to respond to their communities and to more effectively deliver services the United States Agency for International Development asks: "How can we improve the democratic system through our support for decentralisation reforms?"

Democracy and Governance | MSI
Democratic decentralization is the process of devolving the functions and resources of the state from the centre to the elected representatives at the lower levels so as to facilitate greater direct participation of citizens in governance. Devolution, envisioned by the Constitution, is not mere delegation.

Democratic Decentralisation in India - Driшти IAS
According to one definition: "Decentralization, or decentralizing governance, refers to the restructuring or reorganization of authority so that there is a system of co-responsibility between institutions of governance at the central, regional and local levels according to the principle of subsidiarity, thus increasing the overall quality and effectiveness of the system of governance while increasing the authority and capacities of sub-national levels."

Decentralization - Wikipedia
On the one hand it is undoubtedly part of the state, but on the other hand it can appear as a relatively autonomous sphere of government that is close to if not part of civil society. As such, achieving effective local governance is crucial to the project of democratic decentralisation.
